The Square of Cervantes is a plaza which constitutes one of the most attractive breathing spaces in the new city of Manila. It is shaded by trees and is better paved than are some of the public places in Manila. The Square is surrounded by buildings, some of which are occupied by shops, but most of them are used as private residences. As in the towns of Port Rico, the well-to-do classes occupy the upper stories, while the working classes live on the ground floor.
